TrueCompliance

Get Certified

There are approximately 2 billion fire and life safety devices that require individual testing and maintenance within the 11 million commercial and industrial buildings in the U.S. Because the protection of life and property is too important to leave to chance, BuildingReports created the TrueCompliance certification program.

The TrueCompliance certification program extensively reviews and verifies both individual inspectors and service companies.

The program enables service companies to list their licenses, certifications, insurance status, distributorships, etc. along with their employees' details to demonstrate they correctly have all the credentials required as a professional service provider.

Additionally, BuildingReports is a third-party verification service and can independently verify the Service Company and Employee's credentials. Through the TrueCompliance program, service companies are able to provide their customers with peace of mind that they hold all the required credentials and training to complete inspections properly and in accordance with code requirements.

How It Works

Certified

For an individual inspector to become certified in the TrueCompliance program, they must undergo training on BuildingReports' inspection reporting tools by a BuildingReports trainer. Once complete, the inspector receives a proof-of-training certificate. Certification details can be placed in the BuildingReports service to automatically appear in the appropriate section of all of their inspection reports. The "Certified Service Member" seal appears within a report when both the inspector and service company have received BuildingReports training. This assures building owners and managers that the inspector is trained on conducting a life safety compliance inspection correctly.

Verified

The first step in becoming verified is by providing company licenses, certifications, affiliations and insurance details. BuildingReports then contacts each association, insurance company, etc. to independently confirm the service company is up to date on each of the required documents. Service companies that are verified can indicate their status in inspection reports, marketing materials and websites. Verified service companies also receive a "Verified Service Member" seal that identifies them to building owners and managers as a higher-level BuildingReports member.

There is a fee associated at this level of the certification program. Please contact BuildingReports for more information.

Member Locator

BuildingReports' Member Locator service allows facility managers to quickly and easily find Service Members in their area. This convenient online tool not only includes current contact and geographic information, but displays up-to-date TrueCompliance Certified and Verified status so that companies can gain piece of mind when engaging the Service Member network.
